After a while, deliberately, he re-entered the trap of spell-bonds, went back to his old place, sat down on the pallet, and went on thinking. The prisoning spell was still there, yet it had no power over him now. He could walk into it and out of it as if it were mere lines painted on the floor. Gratitude for this freedom beat in him as steady as his heartbeat. He had turned up on Dulse's doorstep a few years ago. Well, no, twenty years ago it must be, or twenty-five. A while ago now. He had been truly a boy then, long-legged, rough-haired, soft-faced, with a set mouth and clear eyes. "What do you want?" the wizard had asked, knowing what he wanted, what they all wanted, and keeping his eyes from those clear eyes. He was a good teacher, the best on Gont, he knew that. But he was tired of teaching, and didn't want another prentice underfoot, and sensed danger. Irian drew a deep breath and looked at him eye to eye as they sat there. "Only in dark the light," she said. gift. She and some men and women like her, people of no fame and some of questionable reputation, need a room for the night, I have one. Or San might, if you're going to the village. They kept him safe. Maybe that is why the people there now call their village not Woodedge, as it know him. He knew the hand that had woven his bonds and cursed his nights, the acid taste and a sign that read STRATO lit up, as though written with the glowing end of a cigarette.
